

David Timm – Bio

David has spent the bulk of his career in the renewable energy field. He has helped to promote and develop the renewables industry from various platforms - in private consulting, within government and now from the community perspective. David was a principal in the development of the WindShare Co-op, Canada's first green power co-operative, which brought North America's first urban-based wind turbine to the shores of Lake Ontario in Toronto. David has been working with the Toronto Renewable Energy Co-op and the Ontario Sustainable Energy Association for the past two years in the development of the idea of Community Power. David is also currently a principal with Current Generation Inc., a wind power consulting and development firm.